Breast Cancer Research

The American Cancer Society is helping people with breast cancer today in every community and is working tirelessly to find cures to end the disease tomorrow.

Thanks to improvements in treatment and early detection, more and more women are surviving breast cancer.

While progress has been made, breast cancer is still the most commonly diagnosed cancer among women in the US, and the second leading cause of cancer death in women. The Society's research program has played a role in many of the advances that save lives from breast cancer today, and is relentlessly pursuing the answers that will save even more lives in the future.

The Facts:

Breast Cancer death rates decreased by 34% between 1990 and 2010 (the most recent year for which data is available).

More than 203,000 breast cancer deaths have been prevented since death rates started dropping in the early 1990's.

Today, the American Cancer Society is supporting more than 248 grants with $90.6 million to find the answers that will help save lives from breast cancer.
